WINE LIST

With the modern design and all of the innovation that EDGE class has to offer, we wanted to approach our award winning wine program with a fresh perspective as well.

Our wine list explores the impact of geography and viticulture from the context of the oceanic influence. Follow our list from the Pacific starting in Washington around the tip of South America into the Atlantic and up to and over through Europe. A quick tour of the Mediterranean and Middle East and back down to the Pacific to finish with Australia and New Zealand.

Washington State

Even though Washington has the direct coastal influence of the Pacific Ocean on its west coast, the eastern part of the state (where the majority of vineyards can be found) is a dry desert-like climate due to the impact of the Cascade Mountains. This is called the “rain shadow effect.”

Oregon

Wine country for Oregon is east of the Cascade Mountains so the cooling effects of the Pacific Ocean are directly felt creating a climate that favors varieties like Pinot Noir and Chardonnay. Furthermore, a good part of Oregon’s Willamette Valley is actual Pacific Ocean sea bed that rose when the Pacific plate collided with the North American plate driving marine floor to the surface and creating the Cascade and Coastal Mountain Ranges. This leads to a great deal of soil diversity in the Willamette Valley along with sediment leftover from the Missoula flood at the end of the last ice age.

Napa Valley

Napa's proximity to the Pacific Ocean is tempered by the protection of the Mayacamas Mountains. There are breaks in the range that allow for fog and cool air to be pulled through the valley like a vacuum creating perfect conditions for growing both Cabernet and Chardonnay.

Sonoma

Sonoma's cool maritime climate is in direct correlation with its relationship to the Pacific Ocean. Trickier varietals like Pinot Noir can grow here, but heartier varietals as well because there is still plenty of sunshine.

Chile

Moving further down the Pacific Coastline into South America we find Chile, a long sliver of a country with consistent pockets of wine regions from top to bottom. Also a product of plate tectonic movement, the Chilean Coastal Range cut the dividing line between Chile and Argentina.

The Humboldt Current is an upwelling of cool waters along the western coast of South America. This brings an enrichment of nutrients to the water making an ecosystem of endemic wildlife (not found anywhere else). The Humboldt Current has a significant cooling effect on Chile and also contributes to the aridity of the Chilean desert like climate.

Argentina

The protection from the cool Pacific influence by the Andes combined with Mendoza's altitude and proximity to the Atlantic, creates a climate that is perfect for evoking color and tannin in wines. The soil in this region is alluvial with rocky subsoil. It possesses sediments of sand, silt and clay. Its little organic matter restrains the grapevine's growth. This results in excellent quality grapes suitable for winemaking.

SOUTH AFRICA

Another southern hemisphere wine region, South Africa's relationship to the vine is heartily connected to the sea. The East India Trading Company originally planted vines in South Africa to combat sailor's scurvy, and eventually led to a modernized industry.

Les Galets

Refers to stones usually lining the ground of vineyards in France. The stones absorb heat from the sun which in turn helps to ripen the grapes. You can taste the flinty stone on the finish, which serves as an excellent reminder of the lava-like, porous stones integrated in the soil.
